Maverick, small dog with a big dog's heart,
you've been running this family right from the start.
Our boys were thirteen and ten when you came through,
now they're grown and gone, but they still come home to you.

*Happy birthday Maverick, we love you so much,
all attitude, and the biggest part of us.
A candle in the kitchen, your name in the song,
the birthday boy's in charge all day long.*

You still play with the toy that you've had since birth, you toss it in the air like the last one on earth.
You drop it in a lap when you want to play,
and the whole house stops and does it your way.

*Happy birthday Maverick, we love you so much,
all attitude, and the biggest part of us.
A candle in the kitchen, your name in the song,
the birthday boy's in charge all day long.*

One knock at the door and you lose your whole mind,
you sound the alarm for all of mankind.
We walk back in and you're a blur on the floor,
like we'd been gone a hundred years or more.

When the lights go out, you dig your way in,
under the blankets where you sleep the best,
another year of you, and nobody moves,
with your chin dropped down on somebody's chest.

*Happy birthday Maverick, we love you so much,
all attitude, and the biggest part of us.
A candle in the kitchen, your name in the song,
the birthday boy's in charge all night long.*

The candle's out, the kitchen's clean, you're under the blankets with your toy, unseen.
